JOHN D. JR. TELLS OF GIFT INFLUENCE

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who testified yesterday before the federal committee on industrial relations, told the committee that he had been founded by a "gift" which would inhibit learning carrying him to lean toward the side of the donor of the funds supporting the institution. He made this statement in answering questions of Chairman Frank P. Walsh regarding the regulation of the Rockefeller Foundation, one of the philanthropic organizations of capital under investigation.

Walsh asked such a question that Mr. Rockefeller said the higher education, but I don't think it would apply to the case of primary schools, said Mr. Rockefeller.

When Mr. Rockefeller took the stand Mr. Walsh at once began questioning him about the efforts of John D. Rockefeller, Sr., to get a Federal charter for the Rockefeller Foundation in 1913. From this interrogation resulted the influence of education secured in institutions interested by multi-millionaires.

$5,152,761 YEARLY INCOME.—Discussing the present state charter of the Rockefeller Foundation, Mr. Rockefeller said: "It gives the Foundation almost unlimited powers for the well-being of mankind."

The witness reluctantly admitted that the charter "might make it possible for the Rockefeller Foundation to circulate information against labor unions." He insisted, vehemently, however, that no such thing was ever contemplated.

Chairman Walsh asked about the income of the Rockefeller Foundation and the witness said that from January 2, 1914, to January 1, 1915, the income of the Foundation from its investments was $5,152,761.

Gov. Beekman Buys Razor at Auction.—PROVIDENCE, Jan. 27.—Articles to the value of $20,000 contributed for the unemployed workers of Providence were auctioned off today before a "packed house." Mayor Joseph H. Chase was the auctioneer. The first article offered was a razor and after several bidding it was knocked down to Governor Beekman for $25. Mrs. Beekman was instrumental in this plan to relieve the unemployed.

SCHOOL IS QUICKLY TWO ALARMS FOR FIRE IN CHURCH

Right hundred small children were marched in fire drill ranks out of the Chelsea Primary School, North End, today, in one minute and a half. Fire was discovered soon after the morning session began in a dressing room on the third floor and Miss Anna M. Noland, the assistant principal in charge of the school, notified the seventeen teachers to lead all pupils to the street.

Gloucester Men Lose Their Case

GLOUCESTER, Jan. 27.—The report of the Bureau of Fisheries on the effects of beam trawling is received with disappointment here. While only a synopsis has been telegraphed, the fact that it is recommended that the beam trawler be provisionally continued operations on St. George Bank, South Channel and Nantucket should be the great breeding grounds for groundfish of the New England coast—a consideration there as practically giving the whole case away.

It is on these grounds that the great bulk of the groundfish catch of the New England fleet is made, and it was to make them as productive as beam trawling that the investigation was begun.

28 SOLDIERS NEAR DEATH IN FIRE

A detail of twenty-eight men narrowly escaped death early today when the barracks at Fort Stanwix in Oswego, N. Y., were destroyed by fire.

Several of the soldiers, overcome by the thick smoke, were dragged from the burning building after the fire was extinguished by the fire department.

The soldiers fled from their cots in their nightclothes and nearly all of their personal effects were lost in the fire.

Shortly after 12:30 one of the men doing guard duty discovered that the building was a mass of flames. He ran to the barracks and hastily summoned the men.

Fort Strong was notified of the fire and a discharge of a powder shell from an extreme distance killed all the barracks north of the barracks.

When the fire department arrived, the barracks were already a mass of flames. The fire was extinguished by the fire department.

Harvard Brewing Co. Lowell, Mass.
Boston Branch, 45 Commercial Wharf

A black and white photograph showing a wide, dark river or stream in the foreground, likely carrying a heavy load of silt or sediment. In the background, a dense line of trees or vegetation stretches across the horizon under a very bright, overexposed sky. The image is oriented horizontally but appears to be a vertical shot rotated 90 degrees clockwise.

BOSTON AMERICAN Diogenes Pushed Back Along the Whole Line

An Investment in Good Music Will Pay Real Dividends to Any City

Good Bands and Orchestras, Giving the Works of the Great Composers, as Well as Good Popular Music, Should Replace Hardy Gurdies, Barrel Organs and Street Bands.

There is no more uplifting influence than good music. Whether it is sung by gifted singers or played by well trained bands, it is ennobling and inspiring. Even without words, the eloquence of music goes straight to people's hearts and makes better men or women of them.

The warden of the Iowa penitentiary has brought about the reformation of more than half of the convicts under his charge by having good music played to them, and by teaching them to produce it themselves.

So interested have they become in the work of the great composers that they devote part of the earnings they get for labor for the State in bringing bands and orchestras and singers to perform and sing for them.

In a few years men believed to be hardened criminals have become useful, ambitious human beings ready to take their places as good citizens when they are discharged from prison.

These men have simply responded to an influence that can reach every human being.

Unfortunately in America the opportunity of the people to hear good music and to benefit by it is limited.

Grand Opera, where the works of the music masters are performed, is tremendously expensive.

The Germans and the Italians and the French, who have learned in their own countries what music means, will make many sacrifices to attend grand opera. Americans, who know little of inspiration, are not so ready to pay its cost.

It should be part of the business of every city to provide the people with the best music, and free.

Hurdy-gurdies, street pianos, barrel organs are merely noisy disturbances, and should be suppressed. Street bands are no better.

Band concerts in the parks, given in many cities, are better than nothing, but they are not enough.

In the schoolhouses of every city there are always halls where free public concerts can be given.

Here the people can be brought to hear Wagner, Beethoven, Puccini, Liszt, Verdi, Bizet and all the European composers, as well as to hear the best music that has been made in America.

Concerts, both vocal and instrumental, with programs including both classical and popular music, should be given at the expense of the city, once, twice, or even three or four times a week.

The public response would be immediate, for all peoples are music loving. Europeans differ from Americans only in having had better musical training.

With free public music parents would soon find their children not only acquiring musical taste but higher ideals.

There would be a rapid rise in the musical standards of the country. More people would learn music for the pleasure it will bring. New composers would produce new and better music.

And much time now wholly wasted by the people would be devoted to instrumental and vocal work, and to bringing music into the homes as well as into the streets and the parks.

Whatever the cost of free music to a municipality, it would be well repaid in a very short time.

All who have heard the noble music of the great geniuses have felt its inspiration.

To carry such an inspiration to all the people means an uplifting of taste and a spur to effort. It means the awakening of ambition, and upon the ambition of a people depends the future of the nation.

Letters from American Readers

WARNINGS ARE LACKING

EDITOR BOSTON AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—With your kind indulgence, I would like to see just a few things to your readers on a subject that should be of vital interest to every mother and daughter. One hardly takes up a daily paper but there is an account of some unfortunate girl who perished with her life, the penalty was a reward for her acts, and she was alone, left alone, and she was alone in the hands of the law. Yet who is most to blame?

First, did her mother warn her? Did she tell her daughter to beware of the many around that in the path of almost every young woman, or did that mother herself take modestly but a false and an false to a living shame? Second, did the pastor of the church warn the young of his congregation of the law, and punish that law? Or did he say nothing, and let the girl go? Or did he say nothing, and let the girl go? More Truth Than Poetry

Who Can It Be?

Governor Ferris of Michigan intimates that some statesman in the President's confidence and counsels is trying to undermine him and land the best nomination for himself.

PERHAPS it's William McAdoo who, toward Nineteen Sixteen, With a projective promise fixed on Nineteen Sixteen.

Perhaps it's Mr. Redfield, who is thinking what an air A set of lambskins would give the Presidential chair.

Perhaps it's Mr. Harless, and there's the faintest chance For a new January from a new, young, young man.

PERHAPS it's Oscar Underwood who's dreamed tremendous dreams And compassed Woodrow 'round about with stratagems and schemes.

Perhaps it's Jim Han Lewis, who has cast a wishful eye Upon a seat that he could garishly buy and by.

Perhaps it's Mr. Garrison, and, though we hate to knock, We will a new campaign disk package it in for him.

WE'VE even heard that Bill McCombs might waltz off of his shelf And try to land the job again, and this time for himself.

We know that someone's skating 'round inside a submarine, With a projective promise fixed on Nineteen Sixteen.

It may be one of several men, and there is some slight ground To think the list is long, but makes that being said.

Croquet vs. Treadmills

By HELEN RING ROBINSON

NOT long ago I visited an Eastern prison for women.

As it happened, I was admitted just in time to see the inmates taking their daily half-hour recreation in the prison yard.

On four sides were high walls of stone and brick, in the center, a deep, level grass-plot. And around and around this narrow plot women were marching in treadmill procession, singly, singly, with folded arms, and a curious shuffling pace, due not so much to prison discipline, perhaps, as to the fact that their shoes were shaped like hams.

As it happened, also, one month I reached the woman's department of the Colorado State penitentiary at Canon City during the recreation period of the inmates.

The afternoon disk was gathering.

"There is the woman's recreation field and ground," said Warden Treadmill, pointing to a wide green space closed under the windows of the cell-house and set with a suggestion of privacy about it.

A croquet ground at a prison! I remembered that Eastern treadmill and moved nearer.

Four women, coming were playing croquet, with a merry clacking of balls and jolly shimmers of laughter.

Now, all the women prisoners at Canon City are to spend their recreation period playing croquet, and not everything about that Eastern prison was so ancient and senescent as the "recreation."

Yet none the less, just as ancient and so-called "recreation" a treadmill monster from a single fossil vertebra, so two distinct

What Effect Has the Wage-Earning Wife on Home?

One Tragic Objection to Woman Working Is That It Almost Invariably Ruins the Husband, Says Dorothy Dix

By DOROTHY DIX

THE real problem involved in the question of whether a wife should earn money outside of the home or not is the effect that it has on her husband.

If a man is poor, and the wife has the ability to make money it would seem nothing but reasonable that she should do so, and thus add to the family comfort and prosperity.

If a woman has fitted herself to follow some trade or profession whereby she can earn a good salary it seems nothing more than just for her to continue to follow it instead of being put to doing the work of a kitchen maid for which she has neither training nor aptitude.

If a woman elects to follow after marriage some work outside of the home it seems nothing but fair that she should pay her husband, as she gives to her husband none of the labor that a wife ordinarily performs in the home.

Under present economic and social conditions there are a thousand good and valid reasons why the woman who has followed a gainful occupation before marriage should continue to follow it after marriage, if she marries a man who is poor and struggling.

One Tragic Objection to Wife Working Is Probable

Ruin of Husband

But there is one tragic objection to it, and that is that it almost invariably ruins the man. Also in some way that is utterly beyond feminine comprehension it seems to kill a man's love for his wife.

I leave it to psychologists to explain this phenomenon of the masculine temperament. I can't, but I merely state it as a fact that the more a woman tries to help her husband, and the harder she slaves for him, the less he cares for her and the less consideration he shows her.

If you are inclined to dispute this proposition remember the long line of dressmakers and boarding-house keepers, and every other class of money earning women you have ever known and try to recall one who had a husband that was even ordinarily decent and kind to her.

On the other hand the more no account, and demanding, and exacting a wife is, the more her husband cherishes her and indulges her. The ideal wife from a man's point of view appears to be a millstone about his neck instead of a ladder by which to climb.

Wife Need Not Expect Gratitude of Husband for Aid in Support

Perhaps the woman who can earn as good salary as her husband, and who is perfectly capable of taking care of herself lacks something of the clinging vine that a man associates with femininity, and so she does not make as strong an appeal to his affection.

Perhaps her very ability and competence to stand alone arouse in him some vague sense of rivalry and antagonism. At any rate it doesn't endear a woman to her husband for her to make money, and if she expects him to be grateful to her for helping to support the family she will find herself very much disappointed. It never works out this way of life.

Another unpleasant effect of the wage earning wife on her husband is that she kills in him all sense of responsibility for a family. The wife who can support herself almost invariably has to do it—and the children into the bargain
